Slang Plagiarists BY LILLIAN RUSSELL.

Slang is invariably a product of mental laziness. Did it ever occur to you that a majority of those things called slang are merely plagiarisms? Of course, they are. Few people originate slang. The majority merely use words and phrases originated and oddly applied by others.

I would not say that slang is not expressive. In many instances it is especially pointed, and really more expressive than words and phrases that would be sanctioned by the most exacting purist. Nevertheless, slang is invariably the product of mental laziness. The user utilizes some other person's words or phrases instead of attempting to be original.

New words and expressions are coming into use every day. The person who can coin words is much to be envied. The one who can originate words and expressions that are sufficiently catchy to leap from tongue to tongue until they have covered the whole country is nothing short of a genius. The percentage of such persons is small. In this age of slang their following is large. This is partly because the word or phrase appears to be strikingly expressive and largely for the reason that either can be used without exacting much thought.

The use of slang is not a particular exhibition of brilliancy. The word graph, you know, records the words of others and repeats them correctly. A great many people who use slang are just like phonographs. They are so mentally lazy that they do not think for themselves, but now and then utter a slangy expression or exclamation which will fit in most any place.

It would be extreme to declare that the use of slang should be entirely avoided. Some of the slang words brought into use a few years ago were considered so strong that they found their way into the dictionary. The new definitions given various words have been so generally accepted that compilers of dictionaries have been compelled to use them.

When slang is continually used by those who are mentally lazy or too dull to attempt originally, it becomes extremely monotonous. If you want to be monotonous, confine your vocabulary to slang. Slang limits talk. One word often means more than a well constructed sentence. That is one reason why it is so popular.

Remember: Excessive use of the slang phrases of the day is an indication of degeneracy.

Lillian Russell's Answers.

Mrs. G. A.: The only way to prevent the hair from turning gray is to take the best possible care of it. Massage the scalp daily with the tips of the fingers and shampoo it carefully about once every other week. Use a tar soap is good for the hair, though it usually gives it an unpleasant odor for a time. Olive oil or vaseline is good to rub in the scalp. I cannot recommend a cold cream to you, but I shall gladly send you a formula for one if you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope. I shall also be glad to send you formula for hair tonic with directions for massage.

B. H.: The narrow black velvet ribbon band around the throat is becoming, I think. A wide band is usually not becoming. If your skin has a tendency to be red, you must be careful in wearing jewelry. A string of pearls around the neck softens the face and a jet necklace tones down the red skin. The black velvet ribbon has both a softening and toning-down effect.

Miss B. G.: The rule for determining the amount of food to take is to eat only enough to leave oneself a feeling of satisfaction. One can know when one is eating too little from the fact that there is a steady decrease in weight. Such should remember that it is bad for both looks and health to become too thin and not eat enough.

Miss W. G.: To prevent acidity in the mouth, take a little milk of magnesia into the mouth and allow it to penetrate every nook and corner. Dampen your toothbrush with peroxide of hydrogen and brush the teeth with this once a week. Peroxide bleaches the teeth.

D. L.: For an excessively oily skin put six ounces of carbonate of soda and one ounce of borax in a quart of hot water. When dissolved, add it to your tub bath. Use Castile soap and dry with a Turkish towel. A daily tub bath is advisable. If you must have a stamped, addressed envelope I shall send you formula for an astringent lotion for oily skin.

Dr. Brady's Health Talk Prevention of Piles.

In the preceding talk the nature of the disease, hemorrhoids, was explained, and the fact that a dilated rectum is an incurable by medical means as a dilated vein in the limb, was emphasized.

There is no known pill cure, except the simple and safe operation, not withstanding the dishonest claims of the many patent medicines and quack systems of treatment, still one subject to piles may, by reasonable precautions, avoid the painful attacks which follow.

Since the hemorrhoidal veins, which constitute piles, when enlarged, drain directly into the portal circulation which drains the liver, it follows that over-eating, alcoholism or digestive difficulty from dietetic errors will increase the pressure of blood in the hemorrhoids by congesting the liver. Hence, moderation in eating and teetotalism in drinking are essential.

Next, the bowels must be kept normally active, by means of a diet consisting of a large amount of fruits and vegetables, preferably.

are indispensable, care must be taken to avoid all pills or tablets containing opium or other narcotics, and ingredients which irritate the rectum and aggravate piles. Compound licorice powder, pure petroleum oil, plain cascara or phenolphthalein may be used without disadvantage. Exercise and the development of a good habit are far better than reliance on any drug to regulate the action of the bowels.

Of supreme importance is toilet. After every evacuation the rectum must be carefully bathed with soap and water, dried, and, if at all irritated, powdered with clean talcum powder. Incidence of hemorrhoids, if fibre or crepe paper should be inserted. Some of the toilet paper manufacturers will have a terrible indictment to answer one of these days. Only by consistent care can hemorrhoids or piles be prevented. A single failure may be sufficient to permit a most painful inflammation in an otherwise inoffensive pile.

Questions and Answers. Fortunate Man.—A reader writes: I am twenty-three, and haven't a hair on my face. Is there any medicine that will raise a beard?

Reply.—Boy, you don't know how lucky you are. There are thousands of daily shavers who would eagerly exchange their faces with yours. You are determined to be a slave of the razor, just try skinning over the face every few days with a safety razor.

Testimonial.—"Dee-lighted" writes: About two months ago I asked your advice about my porriasia. You suggested vegetarian diet. I followed it, and in a few days my skin appears practically normal. Repentance, repentance and reform will not cure disease.

Epilepsy and Eugenics.—Would it be wise to marry a man who is subject to epileptic seizures? He thinks they were caused by a wayward life, but he is now reformed.

Reply.—In our opinion, no. But write the Eugenics Record Office, Cold Spring Harbor, N. Y., and you will obtain expert advice free of charge. Unfortunately, repentance and reform will not cure disease.

C. K. B.—Will wearing thin summer underwear and sleeping outdoors and taking hot and cold showers after game of basketball made one more liable to take cold this winter?

Reply.—No. Keep up the good work.

NEW TESTAMENT NOT A MECHANICAL CREATION

Was Result of Activities of Men Whose Work Was Subject to Human Conditions.

Present Generations Should Look on Writings as Fellow-Interpreters of Teachings of Christ, Says Dr. Bowle in Sermon at St. Paul's.

Minor disagreements between the gospels should not shake the faith of the present generations, in the opinion of Rev. W. Russell Bowle, D. D., who last night completed his series of sermons at St. Paul's Episcopal Church on the interpretation of the Bible. That there are discrepancies, he said, was due to the fact that the New Testament was not a mechanical creation with the guarantee of divine infallibility on every syllable of it, but rather the result of the activities of men whose work was subject to human conditions.

And if mother is worried refer her to this column.

Xeroderma.—What is xeroderma? Itchy.—Pink skin disease or Ichthyosis, a chronic skin disease characterized by dryness, harshness and scaling. It is common on the arms of young women who wish to wear short sleeves. One remedy is the daily rubbing in of a solution made by dissolving an ounce of glycerin in a pint of boiled water.

Anemia and Elsenzucker.—Young women of twenty-four have had anemia a long time, and would like our opinion of elsenzucker and where to obtain it.

Reply.—Elsenzucker is iron oxide sweetened with sugar. It is obtainable anywhere. It is similar to the iron pill or tablet or liquid—but, first, S. O. S., be sure your anemia is anemia, and not tuberculosis or something else.

On a Youth's Back.—W. E. B.'s son, seventeen, has pimples on his back, face and neck like baby boils, and his mother is worried about it.

Reply.—Be of good cheer, Mrs. B., for pimples on a youth's back, neck and face are almost physiological. If that prescription seems inadequate, send me a stamped, addressed envelope for full illumination of the subject of acne-pimples.

SENT TO GRAND JURY

W. T. Dickson Charged With Impersonating a United States Officer.

W. T. Dickson, the young man arrested early last week at Rueger's Hotel by United States Inspector Hal Mosby and Detective Thurman on a charge of impersonating a United States officer, has been sent on to the grand jury by United States Commissioner Melvin Flegenheimer. The man's case will be heard by the grand jury which meets at Alexandria on the first Monday in January.

According to evidence furnished United States Assistant District Attorney W. M. Smith, Dickson represented himself as a secret agent of the United States Treasury Department to the chief clerk at Rueger's, and on that impersonation succeeded in obtaining several advances of money from the hotel. He later departed from the hotel, leaving a large board bill unpaid. He is said to have traveled through Virginia for some time, operating a similar game in several cities, before returning to this city.

As soon as he was seen the police were notified of the facts in the case and the man was arrested.

The police found cards on his person which gave his name and which represented Dickson as an agent of the Oklahoma Geographical Survey.

JUDGE GORDON HOLDING COURT AT AMHERST

Many Chancery Decrees Have Been Entered at This Term—Tollgate Case on Docket for To-Day.

AMHERST, VA., December 20.—Judge B. T. Gordon adjourned court on Friday night to his home at Lexington. He will return to Amherst on Monday and hold court on Monday and Tuesday. The case of A. P. Eckridge, superintendent of tollgates, against C. W. Parr, keeper of tollgate No. 1 on the Lynchburg-Amherst turnpike, is set for Monday, and that of the commonwealth against Oscar Brent Hamilton, who are so much in evidence in the chancery decrees already have been entered at this term.

O. L. Evans, W. K. Smiley, L. B. Davies and others around Amherst have directly to the tollgate, which is about three inches thick.

Sweet Briar College closed on Friday for the Christmas holidays and will not reopen until January 6. The public school for the county will close on Wednesday, December 23, and open again Monday, January 4.

A license was issued from the clerk's office for the marriage of Leonidas R. Cunningham to Miss Nellie May Campbell.

Young people from Amherst have enjoyed skating on Sweet Briar Lake, which for several days has been covered with ice. If the weather continues cold, the skating will be a success.

Judge B. T. Gordon has appointed the following citizens as land assessors for 1915: For the First District, composed of Court House and Temperance, W. S. Gill, T. V. Richards; for the Second District, composed of Elton and Pedlar, S. L. Watts and W. H. Davis. They will begin work January 1.

STATEMENTS NOT BINDING

Present Generations Should Look on Writings as Fellow-Interpreters of Teachings of Christ, Says Dr. Bowle in Sermon at St. Paul's.

Minor disagreements between the gospels should not shake the faith of the present generations, in the opinion of Rev. W. Russell Bowle, D. D., who last night completed his series of sermons at St. Paul's Episcopal Church on the interpretation of the Bible. That there are discrepancies, he said, was due to the fact that the New Testament was not a mechanical creation with the guarantee of divine infallibility on every syllable of it, but rather the result of the activities of men whose work was subject to human conditions.

Dr. Bowle preached to the largest congregation that has attended any of his sermons in this series. He too, as his subject, "The New Testament in the Light of the Higher Criticism."

His text was taken from the fifth and sixth verses of the third chapter of St. Paul's Second Epistle to the Corinthians: "Our sufficiency is from God; who also made us sufficient as ministers of a new covenant; not of the letter, but of the spirit; for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

NOT OF THE LETTER, BUT OF THE SPIRIT

He said in substance: "These words from the greatest of the apostles and interpreters of Jesus express with vivid power just what it is that constitutes the glory of our Christianity. It is the spirit of a new life. Not traditions, not dogmas, not written records, made up the new gospel, as Paul knew it. The gospel was the fact of the life and power of Jesus, making itself manifest not in manuscripts but in men and women."

The written records which tell of that great fact grew up quite secondary to that fact and to faith in it, and in a very simple, informal way, the books that make up our New Testament did not come down by some miraculous process from God as a finished revelation. They were just the letters and histories which particular men wrote to tell other men of what they knew about Jesus Christ and of what Jesus Christ had revealed to their own actual lives. St. Paul was writing part of what was to become the New Testament—part of the book that the church has called the scriptures—when he sat down to write this letter to the Corinthians; but he probably had no faintest thought that his letter would have any such tremendous history. He wrote other letters in the general decade between 50 and 60 A. D., all of them to specific congregations of individuals, sometimes answering particular questions, dealing with immediate and local issues—letters eager and ardent, often unconventional and unadvised, with no oracular purpose of preaching to future ages, but simply to bring the message of Jesus to bear on the living problems which he faced. In the same way, the other letters that are bound up with Paul's were written. And in the same way, too, were the gospels produced. The men who wrote them laid no claim to verbal inferrancy. They probably never thought of it. They were writing, for the growing company of converts, the story of Jesus' life as they themselves had known it, or been taught of it. They laid no claim to any marvelous method of receiving their material from God. They went about the work of gathering it just as any conscientious historians might do. Papias, Bishop of Hieropolis in 135 A. D., says of Mark that "he was a large man, an interpreter of Peter, he wrote down accurately everything that he remembered." In other words, he listened to Peter preach and teach, and recorded what he heard. And Luke, in his preface to the third gospel, gives an insight into his own patient and natural method of reading and consulting all the testimony about Jesus which he could find and then writing what his own earnest search for the truth felt he had mastered.

"Thus, when we begin to think of it historically, we see what the New Testament is. It is not a mechanical assemblage of divine infallibility on every syllable of it. It is the result of the activities of men whose work was subject to human conditions. Hence, the fact that there are minor disagreements between the gospels need not trouble us, any more than it should trouble the troubled Mark or Luke. It need not trouble us about some things in Paul's letters or James's letter or Jude's letter, which seem to have no message that we can clearly grasp to-day, and even that their judgment might seem to us on some particular point not valid. They were not writing primarily for us, but for people and problems of their own time, and they themselves would be the first to repudiate the desire that we should be bound by every letter of their judgments long ago—the first to bid us to see that the revelation of their living Lord may have meanings for us different in application from those which they expressed.

"The true and living and most helpful way to use the New Testament is to look to its writers as fellow-interpreters with ourselves and with all Christians of God's great gospel given in the life of Jesus. We are not bound by all their statements, but our inalienable privilege is to seek the right of Christ for ourselves by their great and matchless help.

"We are not to turn the letter of a written record into bonds to enslave the spirit with a kind of slavery like that of the Jewish legalism, against which the great soul of Paul so flamingly protested. We are to seek to learn to grasp to-day the great reality which the New Testament writers grasped in their time—the living Spirit of God in Jesus to guide us into living truth."
